Demos seize the House

➤ In elections shaped by an unpopular war and scandals, control of the Senate comes down to Virginia and Montana; Pelosi poised to become the first woman House speaker

Tilt of power

Americans speak out on failures of GOP

COMBINED NEWS SERVICES

WASHINGTON — Americans threw Republicans out of power in the U.S. House of Representatives on Tuesday, demanding a check on an unpopular president and a new course for an unpopular war.

Democrats picked up at least 15 House seats formerly held by Republicans, enough to seize control of the House for the first time since 1994. In the Senate races, Republicans were fighting hard in extremely close contests in Missouri, Montana and Virginia.

Exit polls described an electorate more attuned to national rather than local concerns and worried about corruption, Iraq, terrorism and the economy.

But Democrats won't necessarily have smooth sailing even if they win the majority in both chambers. Some of their new colleagues elected Tuesday night are more moderate than many of the party's leaders, especially on issues that have long divided Republicans and Democrats.
